You will have to live a long time and see some stirring times if you want to catch Secretary Grestam evincing laste, worry or anxie y.

A few montas ago a diplomatic matzer of pressing importance came up for consideration. Secretary Gresnam had unfamiliar with the history of the case, witch ran through several years and was embalmed in a large number of formiparament library. One night as the coors of the department were being closed and the cler'rs were rushing away to their nomes, the secretary approached the librarian and asked for certain books bearing on the matter. They were shown to him, and after an hour or so spent in their examination he asked for a. the books and documents there were in the library possessing information concerning tais case. The librarian tumbled our about a half a core of blue books and then asked if he might go home. The secretary noticet.

Away went the librarian to his dinner. After an evening at the theater he went to bed. But he was troubled in his mind. Something seemed to be constantly saying to him that he had not cone right in going away and leaving his chief alone in the library. So next morning he was up a little after daylight, and without waiting for breakfast 10 set out for the state department. The watchmen let him in, and he proceeded straight to the library. There was Gresham, amic a wreck of books and a foor strewn with musty cocuments, reading away. All the gas jets were burning full head, and the sun's rays were streaming in at the window.

Secretary Carlisle works as hard as Gresnam does, out he is a different sort of man. Work worries him-that is to say, sitting all day at his desir receiving callers, taking about offices and backers and the party and incorsements, and all that sort of thing, receiving department chiefs who wish to consult him as to their pureaus, telling senators or representatives in congress why as can't make this appointment or find a place for that protege, worries Carlisle nearly to death. But give him a knowly point in finance, columns of figures as long as the moral law, stacks of Revised Statutes of the United States as tall as dry goods boxes and a piece of paper and a rusty old lead pencil, and he will sit up all night and enjoy himself. He is a stucent, essentially a student. He likes to saut himself up in a corner, lock the door and toink and figure and evolve and

The Populist people are becoming very sorry they did it. They are fast getting to the conclusion that they were a tritle too hasty and over-zealous in fixing up the state of county officers to be voted for on Nov. 8. The trouble is the ticket as it now stands does not command the admiration nor will it get the votes of the majority of even their own party. Crimple Creek is disgruntled despite the fact that she got three of ices out of eight; and the Colorado Springs "Pops" are very indignant that they should have been subordinated for the atecomers and relegated to the rear. There are decided dissensions in the ranks.

Moreover, now that the Democrats have nead their convention and have but up a straight ticket and not endorsed a single Populist nominee they are getting red not for fusion; for they realize the hope essness of the tight without Democratic support. So they have been fusing to beat the Dutch on the street corners for three whole days past.

They are making overtures to the Democracy on the give and hase plan. It some of the Democrats will be so good as to withdraw they will substitute Populists and a will be well he Democratic Central committee has the power to fill vacancies, out the point is to create those vacancies. First then the Pops want Mr. Gibson to withdraw as candidate for clerk. This will eave the field clear for Mr. Berry, who would like very much to be endorsed or to get the votes someliow. Then the Pops will move to 'ay Mr. Ross on the table-and. Mr. Ross has a ready signific his willingness to be laid leaving the field to Harry Se doinridge, to make the run breaurser. 3u5 ⊋eto Eales be asked to retire to the fear in favor of J. W. Creek and the Populists are dreadfully afraid that the lebublicans will take it into their heads to discuss Pete's history. and they do say it won't help his ticket any. There may be still another swap lower down, but that is unimportant.

So far as the Democrats are concerned. they say: "They can put us on their ticket if they want to, but we're Demo-crats first, ast and af the time." The Populists are so much stirred up that they have called a special meeting of their Central committee for Wednesday evening to see if they cannot patch up a ticket that will get some votes.
